The publisher of a newspaper that repeatedly covered up for his sex-crime “predator priest” is now blaming his failure to uncover more damning priest abuse secrets on the government. BishopAccountability.org, a website that has been cataloguing the crimes of pedophile priests in Ireland for the past two decades, recently published a letter from the head of the Catholic diocese in Ireland, Sean Brady, writing in an August 22 letter addressed to Archbishop Diarmuid Martin, the president of the Irish bishops conference, which says, “I have sought to confront, challenge and expose the horror of what has happened in the Irish Church and its involvement in Irish society.” In a recent comment section in The Irish Times newspaper, Brady’s predecessor, Bishop John Magee, repeatedly blamed the government for refusing to provide him with information needed to uncover more damning evidence of Catholic priest sex-abuse cover-ups. In response to criticism that he failed to notify authorities about a pedophile priest at a time when he should have known that child-sex predators might be a problem, Brady wrote, “I am aware of the criticism of the Irish government for its inaction and of the inaction of the Church authorities in the face of the evidence of child abuse in the past and the failure to confront that reality.” Brady also wrote, “The Catholic Church can now be portrayed as an institution 82157476af
